RIP VAN WINKLE.

General Information.

THE object of this book is to furnish all data possible to those seeking information regarding a place to spend their vacation. With this in view, we desire to say there is no better place than the Catskill Mountains, where pure air, fine scenery, natural enjoyment, health and pleasure are all combined.

"If thou are worn and hard beset
With sorrows that thou wouldst forget,
If thou wouldst read a lesson that will keep
Thy heart from fainting and thy soul from sleep,
Go to the woods and hills!—No tears
Dim the sweet look that Nature wears."

—Longfellow.

The modest boarding houses, which generally afford good accommodations at moderate charge, as well as the large palatial hotels, appear in the lists published herein; although there are a great number of respectable farm and village residences in the Catskill Mountains, at which families can be accommodated at reasonable rates. The cost of a summer's vacation necessarily depends on one's habits and resources. There is no region in the vicinity of New York, where the rich and poor alike can secure so much for their money as in the Catskill mountains.

People of wealth have abundant opportunities for displaying their preference for the large hotels, while those of small incomes have it in their power to reduce their expenses down to the narrowest limits. Particular information regarding terms may be found in the Hotel and Boarding House Lists following the descriptive matter in this book.

The Catskills are dotted with innumerable clear, cold lakes and grid-ironed with streams, both large and small. In this great natural health resort may be delightfully passed the "season's idle day."

Every physician realizes that patients requiring a change should resort to some place where there is a large preponderance of sunshiny days, combined with a temperature that will admit of much outdoor exposure, where it is neither too cold nor oppressively warm; where the food is wholesome and the air and water pure. There is probably no section of this country where these conditions are so completely met as in the Catskill Mountains.

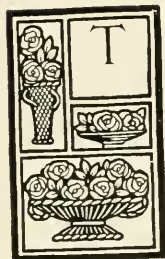

The annual exodus of the residents of our great cities, from its sun-baked walls and streets, is not a fad, but a necessity. It has been clearly demonstrated that to retain health one must spend a portion of the heated summer period in nature's great sanatorium—the mountains.

To those who breathe, for months, the city's impure air, a sojourn amid the wind-swept, sun-kissed mountains, with their dry, cool, bracing air, acts as a great tonic and permits to be stored up, vitality to meet another year's grind of business and household cares.

The Picturesque Catskill Mountains

Are Within Three Hours' Travel of New York City and Cover an Area of 100 Square Miles. Owing to Their Wonderful Beauty and Varied Attractions, Thousands of People Spend the Entire Summer There.

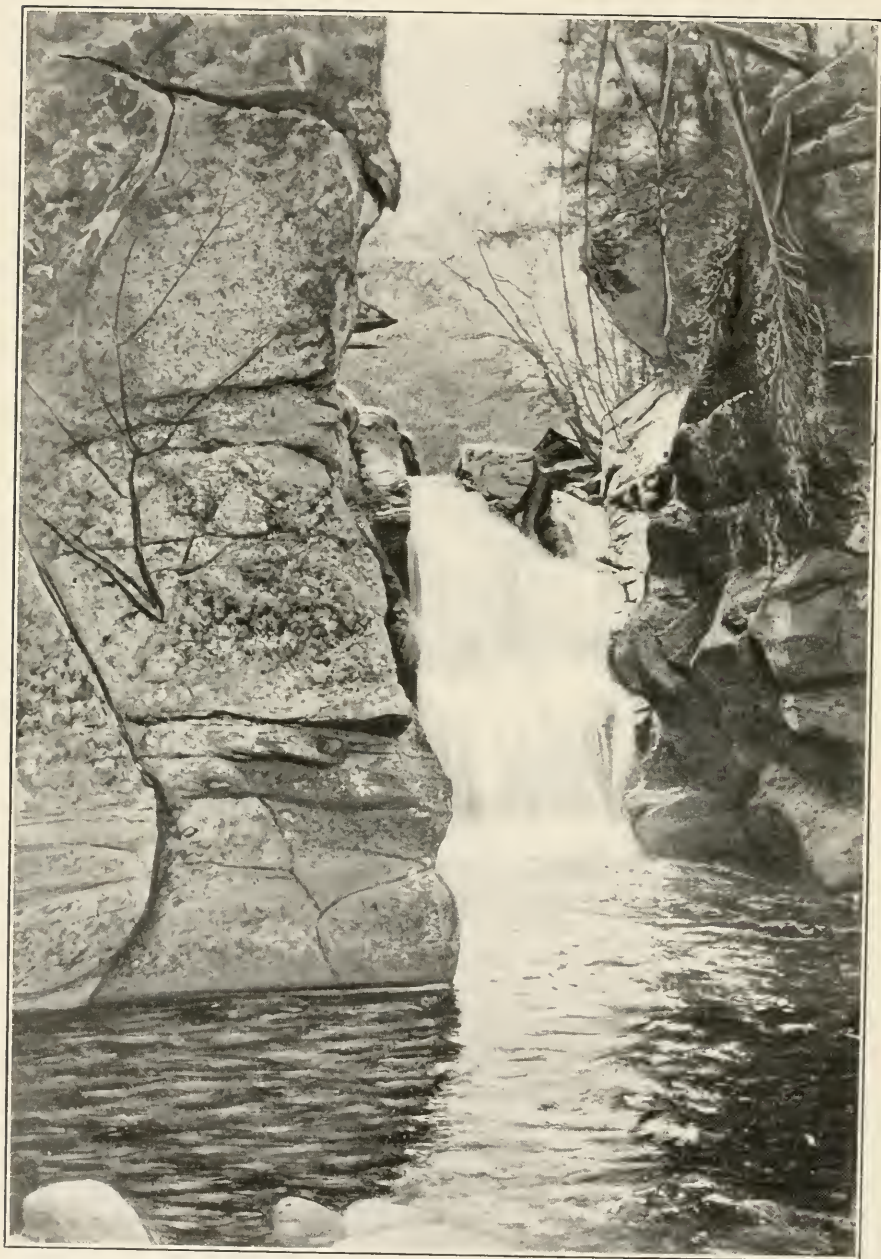

HERE are few groups of mountains in this country where such a perspective of nature may be had to better advantage than in the Catskills—made famous in fiction by Washington Irving as the haunt, the sleeping couch and awakening of Rip Van Winkle. This wonderful group of mountains, situated a hundred miles up the Hudson, is composed of more than fifty peaks, ranging in height from 2,000 feet to 4,220. Between these mighty piles of earth and stone—rugged and wild—are beautiful valleys, exquisite pastoral scenes, and all outward signs of a quiet, happy, domestic life. As the mountains open out into the valleys they break into deep somber gorges where snow and ice are almost perennial and the waters, in starting on their course to the sea, leap over the weathered cliffs, dashing themselves into mist and spray on the rocks beneath, then gurgle and sing their way through the fern and stone environed sluices and cataracts of the ravines in their serpentine course to the plains.

"O Spirit of the mountain!
O toiler deep of yore!
Vast is thy past behind thee,
Thy future ere before.

We call thee everlasting,
Our life is like a day;
With time and tide against thee?
Must thou, too, pass away?"

From the summit of some of these mountains the earth spreads out in a grand panorama, like an immeasurable topographical disk, etched and painted by nature into a scene—immense and sublime. Lesser mountains like so many mounds are brought into relief in the perspective, while lakes and rivers like threads and crescents of silver shimmer between. The great farming areas in the mountain slopes and plains are fretted up into squares and uneven angles, displaying a wealth of colors in the green fields, woodlands and blooming foliage, which, from such a great distance, with the radiations of the sun through the atmosphere, blend into a gorgeous multicolored effect of surpassing beauty.

The Catskills and the fragmentary chains of mountains lying about on the outskirts, belonging to the group, cover an area of about a hundred square miles. There are scores of picturesque villages in their valleys, on their slopes and summits, endowed by nature with such charms of scenery, rustic trysts, wierd and curious features, invigorating air, pure cold water and many restful nooks and corners that give buoyancy and life and vivaciousness of spirit.

Location and Approaches.

New Yorkers may well consider themselves fortunate that the Catskills are so conveniently situated and other great eastern cities, that the millions of people in these cities, accustomed for most of the year to the salt climate of the seacoast climate, may find there a complete change both in climate and scenery. Indeed, from Greater New York, which alone holds nearly 4,000,000 people, the refreshing change and diversity of scenery marks the course from the very boundaries of this great city. It matters little whether the course is laid by rail or water; only the water trip gives the better air from the start and prolongs the shifting views in transit, while it necessarily defers the grand coup of the gorgeous spectacle awaiting the visitor in the mountains.

By water the trip is a day or a night, and by rail but three or four hours. The sail up the Hudson by day or in moonlight is ideal. The anchorage grounds in the river above Harlem are usually occupied by battleships and other war craft of several nations, while the beautiful Palisades hold a perpetual charm in their sheer rock cliffs. Then come various towns of interest, including West Point and Sing Sing, and the distant view of the Catskill peaks which can be seen for fifty miles or more while approaching them. There are two or three steambot lines which cover the distance both ways day and night.

Great railroad lines are laid on both the east and west shores of the Hudson and regularly connect with the several approaches to the mountains.

The Catskills lie back from the river about nine miles in air line, though the distance seems much shorter. This is especially so when viewed from the river front summit; for it would seem almost that one could jump from their awful rock crowned peaks into the waters—so illusive is the element of distance on a clear day.

CATSKILL MOUNTAIN RAILWAY.

Otis Elevating Railway.

The usual railroad and steamboat terminal approaches are at or across the Hudson from Kingston and Catskill stations. The former approaches the most interesting section from the southeast side, and the latter from the northeast side. Just which should offer the better advantage is dependent upon the objective point of the visitor. Catskill station, however, lies nearer the center of the mountain region and offers the short cut to the Kaaterskill summit by way of the Otis Elevating Railway up the mountain side. This remarkable cable road is 7,000 feet long, and in that stretch lifts its passengers 1,600 feet to an elevation of 2,200 feet above the level of the sea. The engine which operates the cable of this road is stationary. The trains consist each of a passenger and baggage car which co-operate with each other in gripping the double cable—the one ascending and the other descending. Each train is capable of carrying about 100 passengers with baggage, and of being run the distance every ten or fifteen minutes. This now famous Otis Incline is a part of the Catskill Mountain Railroad, which connects at the summit with a narrow-gauge railroad (also a part of the system) running down to Haines Corners, tapping the vicinities of the Kaaterskill Park and lake—the legendary haunts of Rip Van Winkle, the Kaaterskill Falls, Haines Falls, Twilight Park, Santa Cruz Park, Sunset Park and Tannersville.

Beautiful Scenery at Catskill, Cairo, and Round Top.

Another branch of the Catskill railway, independently operated, extends from Catskill village on the Hudson to Cairo, a distance of about ten miles. The scenery along this short narrow-gauge road is very picturesque, inviting a constant interchange of attention between the rural scenes, rumbling cascades and rock fissures along its line, and the great Cairo Round Top a few miles away, which the railroad flanks on the east and north sides. This "Round Top" is highly suggestive of volcanic eruption, and more nearly resembles an extinct volcano than any live mountain, for it is almost barren of foliage, and its raw bubble-like shape shows on its sides the rough, congealed terraces of a later spasmodic eruption. This warty dwarf of a mountain, directly overlooking Cairo and Purling, is a formidable gate-keeper of the high evergreen peaks beyond its threshold.

Cairo and Purling and several villages within short stage drives of them are very popular with summer visitors on account of their locations, which are easily accessible to the mountains, and also to the railroads and steamship lines. These towns, being themselves high in altitude, command excellent views of the mountains. All through the area about and to Catskill village are beautiful drives, footpaths, picnic grounds and "particular things to see." There are many high-class summer hotels and boarding houses, affording accommodations for thousands of people.

SUNSET ROCK, HAINES FALLS.

"I wandered afar from the land of my birth,
I saw old rivers renowned upon Earth;
But fancy still painted that wide-flowing stream,
With the many-hued pencil of infancy's dream.

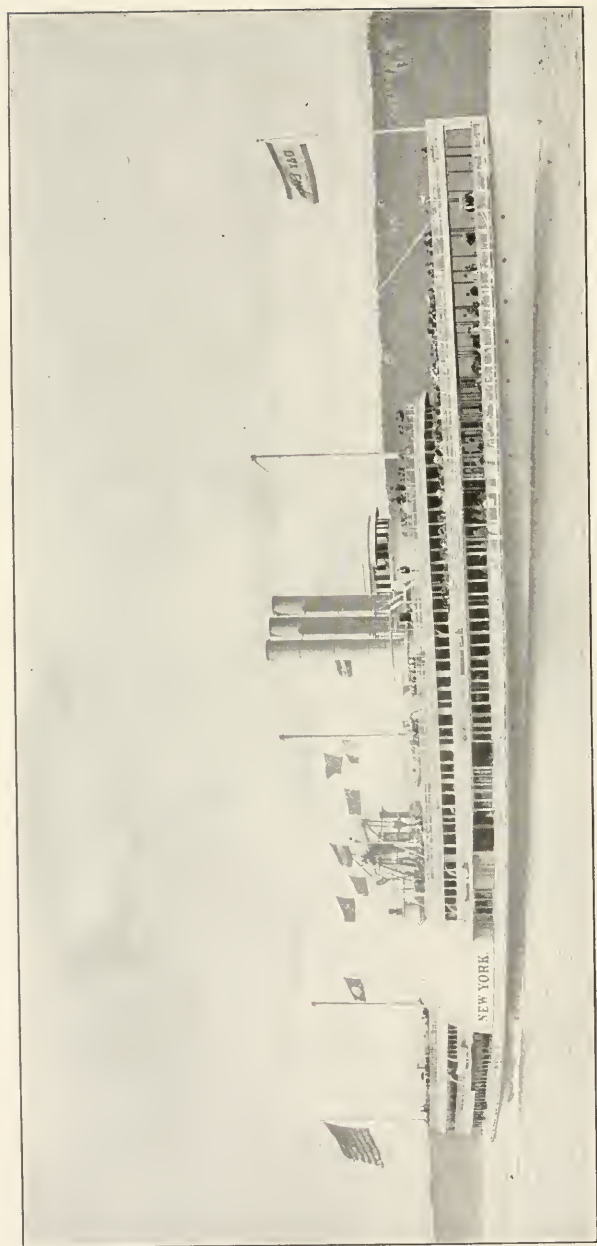

"I saw the green banks of the castle-crowned Rhine,
Where the grapes drink the moonlight and change into wine,
I stood by the Avon whose waves as they glide
Still whisper his glory who sleeps by their side.

"But my heart would still yearn for the sound of the waves,
That sing as they flow by my forefathers' graves;
If manhood yet honors my cheek with a tear,
I care not who sees it—nor blush for it here.

"In love to the deep-bosomed stream of the West,
I fling this loose blossom to float on its breast;
Nor let the dear love of its children grow cold,
Till the channel is dry where its waters have rolled."

Phoenicia in the Catskills.

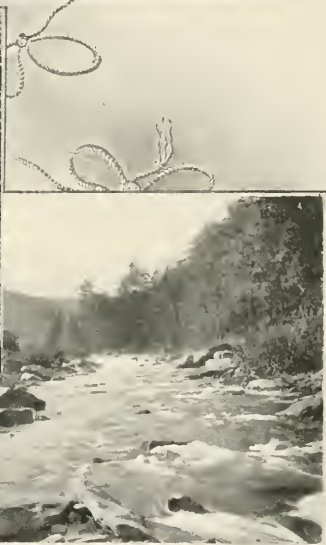

WHEN the tourist has fairly entered the Esopus Valley which winds its graceful curves at the foot of high mountain peaks, he soon marvels at the beauty of the soft lines that encircle his limited horizon, and wonders where he will direct his way, as on every side the steep inclines of the near by mountains seem to close upon him as an impassable wall. Still farther and farther proceeds his fiery steed, unfolding before him ever changing and ever charming sceneries. At one of the first stops in the mountains, a long list of names of places is called to his attention; he has arrived at the juncture of the main arteries of the railroads in the Catskills. This station is Phoenicia, an ideal spot for rest and pleasure as Nature alone can make.

Phoenicia is indeed delightfully situated in the very heart of the Catskills, and has been for a long time a much desired spot for select parks and colonies, but property has been jealously kept by a few and preserved to this day almost in its primeval beauty. This little village of classical name, lays at the confluence of the Esopus and the Stony Clove creeks; it numbers about 400 inhabitants; it has become a favorite summer resort for all those who have once enjoyed its many attractions. With all the natural beauty that any one can desire in a mountain village, Phoenicia possesses all the modern improvements that city people have grown accustomed to. The water supply may be called, in the full sense of the much abused phrase, "the best in the world," for so it has been pronounced by the eminent experts who tested and analyzed the Catskill water for New York City; moreover that supply is furnished by everflowing springs. Light is furnished by an up-to-date acetylene gas plant, with its ramifications to hotels, stores, churches and private residences. The outdoor attractions—and no one comes to the Catskills for anything else—are all that one can desire. Trout fishing ranks first among the quiet and peaceable sports, as the speckled beauties are abundant in the numerous streams of the vicinity, two of them rippling through the center of the village, the Esopus and the Stony Clove creeks. Riding in its many forms is the pleasure and delight of the Esopus valley since the completion of the State road in the town of Shandaken; this road was built at an expense of upwards of one hundred thousand dollars, and extending over twenty miles east and west of Phoenicia, is far above what any one could expect to find in a mountainous region like the Catskills; much will be told when we say that there is no grade too steep even for bicycling. The splendid location of Phoenicia in the very heart of the mountains affords the tourist unequal facility for visiting all points of interest in the Catskills; this can be done by rail in all directions as well as by automobile, bicycle or livery, for within a radius of twenty miles are to be found all the natural attractions that have made famous the land of Rip Van Winkle. From the man of small means to the millionaire, all can find in Phoenicia places suitable to their tastes and purses at the farms, the summer boarding houses or the first class hotels, which are second to none in the Catskills.

This little village glories in the possession of three beautiful churches, the Methodist Episcopal, the First Baptist, recently completed, and the Catholic, lately erected in pure gothic lines with the bluestone of the Catskills, the only building of the kind in the mountains. To people who rent cottages in the vicinity, it may be interesting to know that there are in Phoenicia three general stores, well supplied with every kind of merchandise, a meat market, a bakery, a first-class drug store, two physicians, a public Library, several good liverys, etc.

The climate of Phoenicia, if not as cool as that of the upper regions of the Catskills, is on the other hand, never damp nor cold, and the warmest summer days are always refreshed by a delightful northerly breeze coming down the Esopus and Stony Clove valleys.

Added to all these precious advantages there is another which must needs appeal to many a business man: the best railroad service to be had in the Catskills; three short hours from New York. All these and many other features which could not even be touched upon in this brief space, ought to make Phoenicia one of the most popular resorts, now that the door has been open a little wider to summer visitors.

A short mile above Phoenicia village, a well kept district road branches off the State road, crosses the Esopus and winds its way through the woodland valley to the highest peaks of the Catskills. No one can have a true idea of the Catskills if he leave without at least paying a visit to this delightful valley. If these mountains have been justly called the Switzerland of America, it can be truly said that Woodland valley is the Switzerland of the Catskills, for the noblest of their peaks form a glorious crown to this most picturesque valley where, in the midst of the majestic silence of untrained nature, man has, however, prepared well designed and most comfortable places of rest and delight.

TYPICAL OF GREENE CO., N. Y.

IN SLEEPY HOLLOW.

RIP'S ROCK.

High upon old Kaaterskill's crest
Is a rock, where one may rest
Safely hid from hue and cry;
Henpecked husband, hither hie.

Come with musket, pipe and prog—
Call some other fellow's dog;
Lest you miss old Hudson's crew,
Better bring a flagon, too.

Grievous ills thy musings mar,
Broomsticks, mops, etcetera;

Spite of time, or place, or name,
Woman's ways remain the same.

Flee from endless days of work,
Flee from tasks that thou would'st shirk;
Peaceful dream the time away,
Sleep forever and a day.

In this shade of sweet repose
Mortal man forgets his woes
And fulfills his destiny;
Henpecked husband, hither hie.
